

The Dream-Weaving Spider

In a quiet corner of the forest lived a very special spider called the Dream-Weaving Spider. She did not make webs to catch insects. Instead, she created wonderful dreams for children as they fell asleep. Every night, she wove shining threads beneath the moonlight.

Each dream was made especially for the person who would receive it. For an adventurous child, she wove castles and friendly dragons. For a child who loved nature, she made giant flowers, glowing rivers and animals dancing through enchanted woods.

One night, Martin went to bed feeling sad because he had lost his favourite toy. When the spider heard about it, she carefully wove a loving dream from gold, silver and sky-blue threads. Martin dreamt of exploring a forest of magical toys, finding new friends and hearing laughter around every corner.

When he woke, his toy had not yet been found, but the dream had given him comfort and a new smile.

From then on, Martin and the other children went to bed with excitement. They knew that when darkness arrived, the spider began weaving a unique adventure for each of them, one thread at a time. Thanks to her, every night opened a door to a world where imagination never ended.
